NDP, Grits Hit 'Vicious' Bill

By BRUCE YEMEN and PETER MeNELLY

A Public Schools Act amendment described as "one of the most vicious and dangerous pieces of legislation ever" in Canada was assailed in the legislature Monday night by both New Democratic and Liberal parties.

Debate on Bill 3 was adjourned after two hours of heavy opposition attack on the government's plan to force referendums on teacher salary increases in excess of 6.5 per cent:

NDP education critic Elleer Dailly (Burnaby-North) said the bill's approach will de-stroy collective bargaining for teachers and threaten the ed-quation system with large classes and, ultimately, clo-sure of schools.

She charged it was brought forward to wage "jungle war-fare" against teachers for political purposes.

Brothers defended the bill as an attempt by the government to show leadership in halting wage spirals in the public sec-tor. He denied it would dam-age the collective bargaining

Mrs Dailly said the bill makes second-class citizens of teachers and a mockety of the role of trustees. She said the role of trustees. She said she can't understand how anyone would want to be a trustee under the increasing government restrictions on their responsibility and leadership.

In the past decade, teacher salaries have only kept pace with the rate of increase of all average weekly wades in

The bill will force similar increased ratios all over B.C., she warned.

"Does the government really care what's going on in the classrooms?" she asked.

For all its concern about rising school costs, the government never-called together a commission of parents, teachers and trustees to seek ways to control the costs, she said. BESTRICTION

Instead, it imposes a re-striction that destroys bar-gaining and creates confusion and chaos in the province, she said, adding:

"The people who will really suffer are the children."

A New Concept in Recreation

The visitors will pay fees according to the length of vessel, ranging from $15 to $75, for salmon-fishing privileges, and the revenue will go into a special fund for the creation of hatcheries and spawning grounds.

There can be little argument with the justice of this arrangement. There have been many criticisms of the United States sports craft which fish in British Columbia waters on a weekend, can their harvest aboard, and return to their home ports with a plentiful supply of Canadian fish without having spent a dollar in this country. Use of the new revenue to help to increase the stock of salmon will benefit the visitors as well

Another of Mr. Davis' projects the creation of an undersea park in the Strait of Georgia is also making headway. This would be a new and forward-looking concept in marine parks; to preserve areas of the sea floor, and perhaps some small islands, as unspoiled natural history exhibits for botanists and biologists. It could cater to a vast number of vacationers in the future when undersea adventuring has become a common pastime. Without reservation now, it is likely that the sea floor ecology will become affected by industrial and other activities.

This type of danger was stressed by Mr. Davis in an earlier address urging the undersea park, when he reported that divers have told him of pollution in Howe Sound in recent years. "The big

Because of such influences, it will be necessary to provide what Mr. Davis calls "buffer zones" to create protective areas which will segregate serious sources of pollution from the undersea park region. Because of tides and other factors, an undersea park must have a large area. Mr. Davis admits that "we will have to do a fair amount of pioneering in the Gulf of Georgia." But the project opens up a new and attractive prospect of lasting benefit. The federal and provincial governments should push their present talks toward a definite goal.

The Bomb of Truth

OTTAWA - If Robert, Stanfield ever forms a government, the life of ministers is going to be one long nightmare.

Speaking to a Coronto audience he pledged a Conservative government to a number of specific policies. On the sub-ject of information he said. "We will tell Canadians the truth — the whole truth —

Assuming that Mr. Stanfield has been correctly quoted, this is a revolutionary proposal which may well have the most dire implications for national security. We have had 20 ministries since Confed eration and while they have shown progressively lessening interest in econgenerally, they have been of one mind in their dedication to economy in truth. This is not a reflection on politicians; the people we send to Parliament are for the most part sincere and honorable men. But the "whole truth" involves many difficulties, not the least of which is the fact that it is not a readily identifiable commodity. Even the philoso-phers over the last few millennia have been inconclusive in their findings on this subject and they were not, as a rule, required to answer daily questions without notice in the House of Commons.

Value Judgments

Politics is an area of value judg-ments. Ministers necessarily rely on economists and soothsayers who are capable of anything except agreement with Turner, confronted perhaps wth a question from George Hees; could rush an ex-ecutive assistant off to the department of inance with instructions to come back ing but the truth. But the department, in face of such a demand, would probably conclude that the minister had gone stark mad and was not to be trusted even with he latest release from Statistics Cana-

One of the difficulties is the general assumption that it is a duty of govern-ment to inspire confidence in the country. The whole truth about the economy at any time might be enough to cause a stampede of brokers rushing to hurl themselves from their twelfth the board of trade, therefore, is that our economic problems are beginning to yield to the wise and far-sighted policies of government and that the future holds out promise enough to bring out the best in every red-blooded Canadian.

The reconciliation of rationed truth and the requirements of statesmanship is effected through a time-honored phrase, the public interest. This, of ourse, is a matter of interpretation. There may be the most weighty argument's against divulging the fact that the government intends next week to devalue the currency. But the same phrase is commonly used in rejecting a motion for the production of papers means a new development; indeed, the daily arguments in the House of Commons often bear a remarkable resemtened to in the distant days of the Diefen-baker administration. What we have always been spared is the whole truth. If Mr. Stanfield is serious and was not the unhappy victim of $50 a plate Royal York cooking, future Conservative ministers are going to have a thin time of it. Why has the minister not taken action in such-and-such a deplorable situation?

"Well, if you are bound to have the whole truth, it is because I have been unable to persuade my stupid colleagues in cabinet to go along with me."

Will the minister undertake to make a full statement of government policy in this field?

Will the prime minister say whether

When does the government plan to me to the assistance of this or that in-

"On the eve of an election, when we hope it may do some good.'

There is a question, too, as to the probable impact of the whole truth on a legislative body. Nothing creates a credibility gap more quickly than an assurance from some ministers that what Parliament is getting is the truth and all of it in its pristine beauty. Startled looks are exchanged by members and Hansard records such expressions of concern as "Oh, oh" and "he doth protest too much, methinks."

Mr. Stanfield may also have caught his own party somewhat off guard with a policy not fully explored at the last convention. Alf Hales, the respected chairman of the public accounts comm has presented a bill which appears at first glance a sensible reform measure calculated to improve the committee's contains, however, some rather dark sections - dark, that is to say, if the purpose is to disclose the whole truth. For example, "The committee may, and at the request of the witness shall, take in private evidence, whether oral or documentary which, in the opinion of the committee, relates to a secret or confidential matter."

The probability is that Mr. Stanfield, having despatched Information Canada was simply carried away on a tide of enthuslasm. It is admirable that political leaders should look forward to sharing with us a greater measure of truth. This might in some cases be an appropriate means of curbing those new forms of criminal activity - departmental leaks in which certain persons in government are said to engage. The chances are very strong, however, that after a law agonizing days with the whole truth, any ministry will decide that a bit of oldfashioned rationing is the part of states-manship and pecessary insurance against insurrection by taxpayers.

High Price

Even so, the Conservative leader will doubtless find it he comes to power that the price of a dinner at the Royal York is inordinately high. What Liberal or NDPer will fail to be impressed by a unilateral Conservative committment to the whole truth? From the opening day, every opposition member will insist on a cup brimful and overflowing and the first attempt to plead the public interest will provoke howls of protest from a shocked and disbelieving House.

Some critical Conservatives have mplained that Mr. Stanfield is insufficiently inspirational. In opting for the hole truth, he has gone as far as a man can go. Indeed, given the opinions that most ministers in most governments entertain about other ministers, he probably planted a bomb with a short fuse in the next Conservative government. Nothing is more admirable than a bit of truth in government, but an experiment in the whole truth, apart from weeking the government, might be

The Cost of Doing or Not Doing

The possibility that pollution control measures could slow down economic growth in the U.S. brought a number of private study groups into being to examine affected industries. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has, reportedly, made use of these still unpublished studies in its annual report to Congress on "the economics of clean air." The verdict is that the benefits of air quality are worthwhile economically as well as in other ways.

There is already criticism that the EPA report does not go into enough detail. When, for instance, is enforced control of air pollution the cause of a factory's shutdown, as opposed to other possible causes such as obsolescence or foreign competition? The report is hazy, it says, because of the uncertainty inherent in predicting demand for particular goods.

With an estimated expenditure to provide finances.

The report of the Environmental Protection Agency gives some reassurance, therefore, by indicating that the economic returns justify a continued struggle against air pollution. It seems, in short, that we cannot afford not to

To meet the various objections. an ingenious bill was introduced by Mr. Stanley Knowles (NDP), of Winnipeg North Centre. The bill, read fruitlessly in November 1969, would have allowed the Commons to designate a member for Speaker provided he had sat for two sessions; the newly appointed Speaker would cease to represent his riding and become the Member for Parliament Hill, a non-political riding; a by-election would be called to fill the Speaker's original riding. The Member for Parliament Hill would not have to contest a general election and would be re-eligible for the Speaker's chair at the convening of the new Parliament.

Mr. Knowles' bill would have allowed the continuity of Speaker in the British tradition and would have appeased partisan appetites. But hothing has been done to remedy matters.

He is now almost 71 and gives the vislter an impression of courteous timidity mixed with a certain eagerness to emerge from relative seclusion and discuss events of the complex outer world into which fate catapulted him. Yet it is clear, even from his own matter of fact recollections, that he is a man of personal mettle and, when the rare occasion calls for it, is not atraid to make decisions which the regular governmental apparatus is incapable of facing.

This shy Emperor, whose quite ous preference has always been to reign imperceptibly rather than to rule, thus broke the back of an armed putsch years ago, when his generals were afraid to smash it, and also led his nation out of the disaster of World War II when his ministers disagreed among themselves and simply passed the buck.

Nevertheless, by personal preference Hirohito has a taste for tranquillity. He is known for aversion to pomp and circumstance in his private life and he confesses somewhat sadly that his favorite relaxation is to take a stroll in the country. He only permits himself a day and a half each week for his passional investigation of marine biology. Like his countrymen, he adores watching television.

SUICIDE

Once It Was Acceptable But Then the Christians Turned It into a Sin

The misfortune of our friends are always a consolation, as La Rochefoucauld observed. Likewise there's a sneaking tendency to chalk up suicides as mute compliments to our own staying-power. Hence their popularity, and the modern readiness to help—that is, hinder—them.

What's hard to comprehend is why suicide should ever have aroused antipathy. Yet as late as the 1860s, as Alvarez's brisk history records, there were stern penalties for those who failed to kill them-

Successful suicides, though exempt from such municipal services, were dangled from gibbets or buried at crassroads with stakes through their hearts.

Even Christian doctrine did not justify these barbarities, it appears, until the sixth cen-tury. The classical attitude had been altogether more hu-mane. In Athens the magistrates kept a supply of poison for those who wished to die, and honoured Romans opened

A Safety Valve To Be Left Open

By EDWARD W. DOW

(Dr. Dow is a GP in group practice in Napanee, He wrote this article for The Globe and Mail.)

Death, in our society, is not an integrated aspect of life, to be accepted comfortably and with resignation. There is an abiding ambivalence in every facet of our approach — to stave off the inevitable as long as possible, to spend large amounts of money on the lifeless bulk, to grieve for one who is supposed to be achieving eternal happiness, to eulogize one who caused nothing but pain and unhanginess.

It is not surprising, then, that voluntary death becomes even more charged with violently conflicting enotions. To be honest, hasn't everyone toyed with the idea of eternal sleep as a safety valve for the pressures and frustrations of life, and said to himself—"at least, there's always this way out if nothing else works,"? The only thing that kept me going, at times, was the certainty that I didn't have to keep going, if I so choose.

The official government continue or stilcide has been

The official government position on suicide has been to declare it illegal; the church calls it immoral; and madicine considers it the product of a temporarily deranged mind. The law against suicide has been defined as the perfect crime because, of course, only if you fail can you be punished.

Religious prohibition has been more effective per-haps, since if carries a much graver punishment in the event of success. As the church influence on secular af-fairs wanes, medicine is taking up this challenge and may

As a recent article by a psychiatrist in the Canadian Medical Association, Journal suggests: "our patient admits to having suicidal thoughts, but says, with seeming sincerity, that he wouldn't actually do it... Can we feel safe in letting that patient go away with a pifl and an

And electroconvulsive treatment is said to be the first choice for "relieving the depression, suppressing the concern and improving the depression, suppressing the concern and improving the control." Think about that the next time you tell your doctor you are depressed.

Organizations such as Crisis Intervention and Suleide-Prevention Services have goals which are consistent with society's views on suicide. I predict, however, that as the availability of the services increases, and the number of calls and threats of suicide increase, so will the number Suicide can be a safety valve and, if it is closed, the pressure will increase. People will prove that this one avenue of escape cannot be denied them. If the fantasy is removed, more will need to act it out in reality.

Is it immoral to suggest that suicide might be a reasonable alternative to some life-situations which we can all imagine, only too vividly? As quality of life becomes more important than quantity, is it not reasonable at least to allow people to make this kind of decision without the law, the church, and medicine all promising punishment or unrealistic hopes of speedy solutions to their problems?

Why not provide facilities where people can go to make this decision and, after a waiting period, carry it out painlessly and with dignity?

McGeer was the only op-position speaker in a brief second reading debate of the bill which was adjourned by the New Democrats who wanted more time to study the proposals.

The Liberal leader charged that the 20 years of Social Credit in B.C. have been characterized by an abuse of the ectoral process.

Transit Plan 'Hollow'

The B.C. government's rapid transit bill makes a "hollow mockery" out of the subject because it refuses to a c count for depreciation costs. Ernie Hall (NDP-Surrey) told the legislature Monday.

Hall spoke during third reading debate of the Provincial Rapid Transit Subsidy Act. The bill allows the government to pay half the operating deficits for municipally operated transit systems.

Hall pointed out the bill does not allow government sharing on depreciation costs.

'If it were not for depreciation costs,' he said, 'many rapid transit systems would break even."

PEANUTS BILL!

Dennis Cocke (NDP-New Westminster) said it was a "peanuts bill" that won't do anything for development of rapid transit.

Bob Williams (NDP-Van-eouver East) said unless the government is willing to in-clude depreciation costs there won't be enough money generated by the system to provide for purchase of new rolling stock.

Premier Bennett said Wilhaving said that.

Williams said Bennett has. stayed in power for 20 years by setting the city against the country and he knows nothing about the needs of the people of Vancouver.

On a recorded vote, Scott Wallace (PC-Oak Bay) voted with the NDP as the Liberals joined with the government to give the hill third reading by a vote of 38-12.

The bill was given second reading on a 44 to 6 vote, all New Democrats supporting the government.

The bill raises from $60,000 to $150,000 the exemption available for "special beneficiaries" close relatives of the owner of the estate:

Wilf's Role in Sports

Just a Way of Life

comes naturally, for Wilf.

walker

When Wilf Sadler came to dinner at the Empress Hotel last night - he was doing just what

The reason? Find a sports event, and you'll almost always find Wilf. For the past 25 years 4t's been the same story. Sport has been a way of life for him, and him for sport. When Wilf Sadler left that same banquet table, later that evening, he had every reason to feel proud. He had just been paid a deep debt of gratitude for a job Wilf Sadler, 56, had been proclaimed Sportsman of the Year at the fifth annual Victoria Sports Celebrity Dinner.

The list of Wilf's credentials and his remarkable contribu-tion to sport is long, and well documented, and won't be enlarged. It might even embarrass him. Suffice for the moment to humbly suggest that if it wasn't for Wilf Sadler, sports in the city would be the poorer.

For example, when Babe Ruth baseball first came to Victoria 19 years ago, who was there to meet it? Wilf Sadler. He has been en executive ever since, finally resigning last year as Pa-cific Northwest director and international director.

In soccer, for years he has been a director of juvenile soccer for the lower Island; he is president of Victoria West-United of the Pacific Coast Soccer League; is also president of both Vic West first and second division city clubs, director of

But if Wilf's citations are numerous, he almost didn't get the chance to make it to dinner—last night, or any other night recently. And therein is another insight into the character that is Wilf Sadler's. Adversity is not in his make-up.

Tragedy Marred Jaunt to Oregon

It was four years ago this summer. Wilf had been to Klamath Falls, Oregon, for the Babe Ruth world series (it was like "my annual vacation," he said later), and was on his way home with his wife, Betty, and daughter, Frances, when disasso he did what he likes to do best. He spent more time with sport. And his wife, who couldn't work either, assisted him.

Last Saturday, he was on the ice as usual. And when he left, where did he go? To the soccer game, of course, to see his Vic West-United team move into temporary possession of first

"I guess I'm a pretty lucky guy." he once said of his near fatal accident. "I'm here."

Today, many Victorians should be thinking that they are the "lucky ones," for having a fellow like Wilf around.

Herb Capozzi, former manager of the Lions, polished as usual in his position as main speaker, also injected considerable fun into the proceedings. But Herb was more serious than usual as he finished with a warning on the need to combat the spreading use of hard drugs in the province and a suggestion that sports bodies and individual citizens could play vital roles in the fight.

He had several of his ribs broken, both lungs were punctured, one leg was shattered, there were other undetermined injuries, and pneumonia had set in. His wife had both shoulders broken, and Wilf won that battle, and 16 days later was allowed to leave Cowlitz Hospital in Longview and return to Victoria. On that trip home he was under the supervision of a doctor and a nurse.

introduction of cable televi sion systems over the next decade will have disturbing consequences for established proadcasters, Canadian Radio relevision Commission chairman Pierre Juneau said Mon-

He made the remark in answer to a question from the floor after addressing a gen-eral meeting of Victoria Chamber of Commerce, in Empress Hotel dining room.

Juneau said cable TV's force on broadcasting would depend on how television broadcasters implement CRTC's "open" poficy on cable transmission.

It is time to develop cable TV, he said, indicating the industry would work out solutions to the problems it encounters as cable develops.

Juneau noted that when a cable system is licensed a large amount of hard competition is introduced to the broadcasters, who have had to qualify for their liceness.

STILL AN INFANT

Development of cable TV is still in its infancy in most of Canada. Victoria is one of the most highly developed areas in North America with 90 per cent of the households connected to cable. Juneau also was asked for his views on local ownership of broadcast mediums, a principal which he said the commission endorses.

But it must meet local conditions, one of which is will-ingress of local people to invest in these local outlets, he

In the near future both the in the near nature count the choice and quality of Canadian programming available to the majority of citizens would increase, Juneau said in his speech.

Juneau noted that broad-casting and cable transmis-sion companies are prosper-ing and that neither during discussion of nor after the new regulations of 1968 did any broadcaster turn in his license to the commission.

He said it is gratifying that Canadian broadcasting commands such value for the business being sold and is therefore "capable of doing the job that needs to be done for the public of Canada."

PREMATURE DEMISE

The film and record-making The film and record-making industries have benefitted from the growth of broadcasting and the requirements for Canadian content, but the "early flowering of this new industrial sector must be carefully mirtured and protected," he said.

They must be safeguarded and promoted, for like the shows that fall to get ratings, shows that rail to get ratings, they may auffer premature exit. "Except that in this case we will, in fact, cancel ourselves. Becuase to obliterate real works of the Canadian imagination is to obliterate ourselves."

It will take time, however: "We can't achieve in one season what the New York and the American West Coast television industry has in two

At present Canadian voices and Canadian talents are a minority in North America. "They can only be a minority in the world. Can Canadians accept to be a minority voice in their own country?" Jun-

The demand for freer Canadian expression is part of an older, more profound struggle, the struggle for freedom of expression, which may be victim of censorship in the world's freest communication system, the chairman said.

Canadian voices are the ones vulnerable to censorship caused by the nature of technology itself: "censorship by mass marketing philosophies, censorship by multi-national

It has been recognized that not all Canadian expression could be channelled through the public broadcast agen-cies: "Private enterprise had cies: "Private enterprise to be actively encouraged."

But it is private enterprise of a broader and more fundamental meaning that is normally associated with the Camerce, he said.

Zoning Changes Snarl Projects

Proposed amendments to Victoria's zoning bylaw are already taking their effect on developers who are seeking building permits for large construction projects.

The proposed bylaw amendments, which would permit no buildings over 14 storeys or 140 feet and would limit floorspace ratios to 3:1, were instrumental in city council's 3'B'' committee decision today to withhold building permits for two projects and refer the third back to the developer for modification.

The bylaw amendments will be decided upon by city council at that time.

The third project, an office spartment-commercial complex, came closest of the three to being approved. The committee's decision was to have Ald. Mike Young, community planning director, try

This fact I first discovered in notes by the late E. A. Bowles the great English gardener who wrote a monograph on Snowdrops and Snowflakes.

After trying out several groups of snowdrops by moving them successfully at the end of March, both within the garden and into other gardens, the same method was used with the little winter crocuses. This was successful also.

However, to get back to Snowdrops and Snowflakes. These are two different plants belonging in the same big family Amarillidaceae. Superficially they are look-alikes. Several varieties of each are grown in local gardens.

In the flower description you notice the three petals and the three sepals are of equal length producing the effect of a-dainty parasol, with a green dot at the tip of each segment.

Height and width of leaves of both the Snowdrop and owflakes varies with the vigor and variety.

Snowdrops will take more sunshine than the Snowflakes; quite understandable when you remember the difference in intensity of light in winter and summer.

Plant these precious bulbs in good leafy soil where they may grow undisturbed for years, and in places where they may be enjoyed at close range. Here is another case of the exquisite work of nature being worth close examination by the onservant gardener.

To find further information in encyclopedias and garden books look for snowdrops under the generic name Galanthus.

You will find tall and short, early and late, singles and doubles. You notice they have three outer sepals which are longer than the alternating three inner petal segments tipped Snowflakes, which begin flowering during March while the January snowdrops are still with us, are found under their generic name Leucojum.

In this genus you discover are varieties blooming in early summer and September as well as the March variety.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Leper Less Likely to Be Separated

ties.

When I was visiting the leprosy settlement in Hawaii, years ago, the doctor fold me of a man who had lived with and slept in the same bed with five leprous wives in succession, and never got the disease. Another man lived with four leprous wives in succession, and he didn't get the disease. Obviously, then, for many persons the disease is not contagious at all.

Also, I have read that in the leprosy settlement in Carville, La., no attendant or nurse or doctor has ever contracted the disease. My father was for years in charge of leprosy research in Hawaii, and he never got the disease. For a while I was in charge of the leprosy colony in San Francisco, and I did not get the disease.

In many places the disease appears to be non-contagious. In all of the United States, England and the continent of Europe, there has been very little leprosy.

When I was a boy in Hawaii, I heard the natives calling lep-interestingly, in some countries, like certain parts of Africa, there is no stigma associated with the disease. In a fine article by Drs. Z. Cussow and G. S. Tracy, in the Bulletin of the History of Medicine, I read that much of the terrible stigma was due not only to the Bible, but also to "Ben Hur," the book about the galley slave who lived in the time of Christ and later became a great chariot racer in Rome. There is a vivid description of the disease, which, according to the story, afflicted Ben Hur's mother and sister.

I am satisfied also that much of the supposed leprosy of the Middle Ages could not have been leprosy, because so many of the old writers speak of it as having been acquired by sexual intercourse with a prostitute. Leprosy is not transmitted in that way. It is unfortunate, however, that these writings have given people the idea that leprosy is associated with uncleanliness and great moral stigma, and I am glad to see that those old ideas are gradually dying out.

But some buyers would review their agreements if it was in their long-term interest to do so, they said, and some companies were already paying more than required by their contracts.

In response to a question, Nickle said that because of the premium value of gas as a fuel and raw material, Alberta should eventually regulate the end-use of gas it frees for export.

The Conservation Board members sought an estimate of how much Alberta resi-dents would benefit from higher gas prices and said the figures submitted so far in-dicated consumers would pay an additional amount for gas that was equivalent to what the government would receive in higher royalties.

Nickle said in some cases small industries might be forced out of business because they could not absorb the higher fuel costs.

But the government could alleviate this additional bur-den out of its higher royalty returns, he said.

However, there is no essential difference between increased fuel costs and increased labor or basic material cost, he said, so there is little reason for the government to intervene in one area but

Board chairman Dr. G. W. Govier said the CPA submission was a simplified cost-benefit analysis and that a more comprehensive study would be better.

In answer to a question, Ru-dolph said it was unlikely that additional profits to producers as the result of higher prices would go outside the province as findings of new reserves determined the companies fu-
